A Memorial To My Godson

Marcus "Frankie" Cook

(1985 - 2015)

Fifteen years ago, in February 2001, my wife and I signed up to volunteer as teen mentors through Renaissance Unity Church in Warren, Michigan. We were matched with a 15-year old young man, Frankie, and his 16-year old sister, Chrissy. Tina mentored Chrissy for a year. Frankie andI bonded and Tina had an immediate connection with him, too.

After Terry's two-year mentoring commitment ended-and Frankie was 18-we continued to get together with him regularly and also stayed in touch by phone. Frankie was one of those rare souls who was open to new ideas, new people, and new experiences. We had the privilege of introducing him to many of our friends and everyone who met him seemed to sense the same thing.

Frankie was the middle child of 7 kids. His father was an alcoholic and drug addict and rarely was around. Frankie's family was extremely impoverished. His mother was kind but stern. Frankie seemed to carry the burden of responsibility for looking out for his younger siblings. He was struggling in high school so his Mom had the good sense to send him to the Michigan Youth Academy in Battle Creek, Michigan when he was 18. It was a military-type high school. Terry visited him several times over the year he was there. Frankie learned some discipline, life skills and earned his G.E.D.

Shortly after graduating from the Academy, Frankie's Mom fell ill and moved to Nashville, Tennessee to be closer to her family. Frankie was the first of the kids to move down there. He was very loyal to her. He found work as a mixer at the Sara Lee main bakery. He met Nickie when he was 19 and they married shortly afterwards. It was his first real relationship. Nickie had a young son, Isaiah, whose father wasn't around much. Frankie made him feel special and cared for.

Frankie's Mom died about 5 years ago and he took it hard but carried on. As the years passed, Frankie and Nickie had three children of their own in fairly quick succession: MJ, 5; Christian, 3; and Jordan, 1. Isaiah is now 15. Frankie, a dedicated father, adored all four boys. Despite working hard and long hours and sometimes odd shifts, he spent as much time as he could with them. He had just recently got a better job at a Coca-Cola bottling plant as an assistant manager. He switched from working 9-5 to a late night to early morning shift so he could spend more time with his kids during the day.

Frankie was the kind of person who people leaned on and often expected much from. It was evident that his caring came with burdens but he never bemoaned his many hardships. It was as if he lived in two worlds at once-he was unfailingly loyal to his family and their certain habitual ways, yet his soul seemed to expand and shine.

As our bond deepened over time, he started calling us "Mom and Dad." We, in turn, started to call him "son." It felt right. We were probably one of Frankie's few supports to turn to in times of trouble or need. He was religious in his own way and went to church on and off but we always did what we could to listen and offer guidance if asked. Being child-free, it was the closest thing to parenting we'd known.

We were always in awe of Frankie's strength and vulnerability. He was either joyful or striving to get back to joyfulness as quickly as possible. In truth, we often felt he was mentoring us.

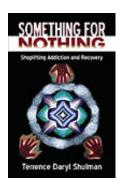

On Friday morning December 18th, Frankie called us. We put him on speaker-phone and, over the next half-hour, we listened and offered him words of support and praise. We told him he's a good father and that we both would have been blessed to have had a father like him. We told him to keep in touch and let us know how things were going and that we planned to visit him in the spring.

Two days later, around 4am Sunday morning, Frankie got off his late shift a bit early and was driving home on the freeway. He had to exit because an accident was blocking the road. In the quiet darkness and misty of his highway detour... well, you know how this ended. He'd just turned 30 in September.

We are still in shock and finding tears flowing intermittently. We looked forward to having Frankie in our lives forever and watching him grow and watching his children grow. It was a miracle how our lives came together 15 years ago and how deep the bond grew in that time. We are blessed and honored to have met and known Frankie and to be a part of his life. We are better people because of him.

Frankie, we love you and we'll never forget you. We're going to miss you so much!
